

Your brand voice is trapped in your head.

A five-file vault for turning customer language, proof, objections, offer boundaries, and founder taste into memory your agents can use before they write.

BRAND-MEMORY-VAULT

---

01

audience.md

Who this is for

---

02

offer.md

What you sell

---

03

proof.md

What you can defend

---

04

voice.md

What sounds right

---

05

objections.md

What blocks the deal

Generic output is usually a memory problem.

You ask for a landing page. The model gives you something clean and dead. Then the founder rewrites it by instinct.

That instinct is the missing system. This vault turns it into source material an agent can read.

---

Enough structure to be useful. Not enough to become theater.

---

audience.md

Buyer, beliefs, language, wrong-fit customers.

---

offer.md

What you sell, what it replaces, where not to overclaim.

---

proof.md

Numbers, stories, failures, source links.

---

voice.md

Good examples, bad examples, words to use, words to avoid.

---

objections.md

What buyers say, what they mean, what answer works.

---

Fifteen minutes. Five additions. The vault compounds.

01 Add one approved line.

---

02 Add one rejected phrase and why it failed.

---

03 Add one customer phrase.

---

04 Add one proof point.

---

05 Add one objection from the week.

---

---

● AGENT PROMPT

Read the brand-memory-vault folder before drafting.

Use audience.md to decide who this is for.

Use offer.md to avoid vague positioning.

Use proof.md for specific evidence.

Use voice.md for tone and banned patterns.

Use objections.md to handle resistance honestly.

Before writing, summarize:

1. The buyer.
2. The belief we are challenging.
3. The proof we can use.
4. The claim we must avoid.

● SHIP CHECK

Ask this before anything goes live.

---

Did this use real proof?

---

Did this answer a real objection?

---

Could a competitor say the same thing?

---

Did the agent invent a claim?

---

Would the founder still need to rewrite the whole thing?

---